IRI 110 & IRI 111 – Introduction to the Irish Language

IRI 110 and 111 offer students an introductory level study of the Irish Gaelic language. Irish is the oldest surviving Celtic language, dating to the Roman Empire, and it opens a window to the Gaelic Order prior to 1690, a span of over 15 centuries. This course sequence teaches students the basics of grammar, syntax, speaking and writing in Irish, as well as some of the historical and cultural contexts within which the Irish language developed and to which it is deeply tied. The courses do not count for Core credit in Modern and Classical Languages, but they do count for undergraduate elective credit and for credit towards the Minor in Irish Studies. Students may enroll in IRI 110 without committing to taking IRI 111, although IRI 110 is a prerequisite for IRI 111. To enroll, students must contact the Director of Irish Studies (mwhite@fairfield.edu).

TA 300B – Special Topics: Acting the Medical Patient

This course is a new collaborative effort between the Egan School of Nursing and the Theatre program of the Visual and Performance Arts department and is team-taught by an acting professor and a nursing professor. The course trains students to portray clients and family members in various healthcare settings. Through specific performance and therapeutic communication techniques, students will serve as Simulated Healthcare Performers (SHPs) within live simulation lab experiences with healthcare learners in the Egan School of Nursing. Once students complete this class, they are eligible for ongoing paid work as SHPs in the Egan School of Nursing. No prerequisites, no previous acting experience needed. Does not count for VPA or Science core. 3 credits.
